Wall Street tanked on Thursday, slamming the book on the longest-ever U.S. bull market after new travel restrictions to curb the coronavirus spread spooked investors and rattled world markets.

President Donald Trump's Europe travel ban, announced late Wednesday, sent all three major U.S. stock indexes into a tailspin, with the S&P 500 and the Nasdaq confirming their first bear market since the financial crisis.

The blue chip Dow suffered its worst one-day loss since October 1987's "Black Monday." The benchmark S&P 500 and the Nasdaq have lost over a quarter of their value since reaching record closing highs just 16 sessions ago, as nations around the world grapple with how to contain the fast-moving coronavirus and its economic effects.

A bear market is confirmed when an index sinks 20% or more below its most recent closing high.

Trump's sweeping travel restrictions, limiting flights from continental Europe to the United States, sent European shares to a near four-year low and slammed airline stocks, already battered by the spread of COVID-19.

On Wall Street, airlines plummeted 19.6%. Boeing Co fell another 18.1% as J.P.Morgan abandoned its long-term backing for the company's shares, setting the planemaker on course for its worst week ever.

The U.S. Federal Reserve is expected to cut interest rates for the second time this month at the conclusion of its two-day monetary policy scheduled for next week. U.S. Treasury yields tumbled as anticipation grew for aggressive easing on the part of the Fed.

The New York Federal Reserve announced on Thursday that it would introduce $1.5 trillion in new repo operations this week. Interest rate-sensitive bank shares dropped 10.5%, while corporate credit worries hit bond fund prices as companies began to draw on credit lines.

The CBOE Volatility index, a gauge of investor anxiety, shot up to levels not seen since November 2008, the height of the financial crisis.

The Trump travel ban also hit oil prices, sending front-month Brent crude down 8.6%. Oil prices were already under pressure after Saudi Arabia and Russia vowed to boost production, flooding the market with supply despite plummeting demand.

The S&P 500 Energy index lost 12.3%. The Dow Jones Industrial Average fell 2,352.6 points, or 9.99%, to 21,200.62, the S&P 500 lost 260.74 points, or 9.51%, to 2,480.64 and the Nasdaq Composite dropped 750.25 points, or 9.43%, to 7,201.80.

Nikkei

Japanese shares tumbled on Thursday, with major indexes at three-year lows after the United States rattled markets by imposing sweeping restrictions on travel from Europe and world health officials declared the coronavirus a pandemic.

The benchmark Nikkei average slumped 4.4% to 18,559.63, its lowest closing level since April 2017. The fall was the second-biggest one-day decline in 15 months and dragged the index into bear market territory - 23% off its Jan. 17 peak. The Nikkei's volatility index, a measure of investors' volatility expectations based on option pricing, jumped more than 10% to 52.09, its highest since March 2011 when massive earthquakes and a tsunami struck Japan.

The Nikkei slid further below the estimated average cost of the Bank of Japan's stock purchases around 19,500, raising concerns about the central bank's credibility and the sustainability of its hyper-easy monetary policy.

The World Health Organization described the new coronavirus as a pandemic for the first time on Wednesday, adding that Italy and Iran were now on the frontline of the disease and other countries would soon join them.

U.S. President Donald Trump said Washington will suspend most travel from Europe, except from the United Kingdom, to the United States for 30 days starting on Friday. He also announced some other steps, including instructing the Treasury Department to defer tax payments for entities hit by the virus. But investors were hardly convinced those measures will turn around the global economy as concerns grew that the number of infections could quickly snowball in many countries.

The broader Topix plummeted 4.1% to 1,327.88, its lowest closing since November 2016, sinking deeper into a bear market. All of the 33 sector sub-indexes on the Tokyo Stock Exchange traded lower, with sea transport, air transport and mining being the worst three performing sectors. Mitsubishi UFJ Financial Group Inc, Sumitomo Mitsui Financial Group Inc and Mitsubishi Estate Co Ltd shed 5.5% each, while the TSE REIT index plunged 6.5%.

Among other major names, Toyota Motor Corp dropped 3.5%, SoftBank Group Corp lost 6.3% and Sony Corp declined 4.3%. Elsewhere, the index of Mothers start-up shares plunged 5.4% to a seven-year trough.
