GLOBAL MARKETS

U.S. & Global Markets – The dollar rose to fresh 2018 highs on Monday while oil prices climbed to their highest since late 2014, driven by declining Venezuelan crude production and worries the United States could re-impose sanctions on Iran.

The crude surge lifted energy stocks in Europe and on Wall Street, with European shares supported by strong results and gains in Nestle after the Swiss company agreed to pay $7.15 billion to Starbucks in a global coffee alliance.

The euro broke below $1.19 for the first time this year on weaker-than-expected German industrial orders and declining euro zone investor sentiment.

Investors increased bets that rising U.S. interest rates would continue to boost the dollar, while traders unwound their bearish positions on the greenback.

An index that tracks the dollar against a basket of leading currencies climbed to 92.974, its highest since December. The index was last up 0.23 percent at 92.782.

"The general view right now is that the dollar is probably going to continue to move a bit higher against the euro in particular, maybe against the yen as well," said Larry Hatheway, chief economist at GAM Investment Solutions.

The euro could slip to $1.1750 or even $1.15 as a support level as the Federal Reserve tightens monetary policy and the European economy trends weaker, he said.

"There's a general appreciation the Fed is going to move at least twice again this year and the consensus is shifting toward three more moves this year."

The euro fell 0.3 percent to $1.1922, while the Japanese yen slipped 0.04 percent to 109.07 per dollar.

Venezuelan oil exports came under threat after U.S. oil major ConocoPhillips moved to take Caribbean assets of state-run PDVSA to enforce a $2 billion arbitration award, three sources told Reuters.

The move could further crimp PDVSA's declining oil output and exports.

Widespread expectations that President Donald Trump will withdraw the United States from the Iranian nuclear pact also weighed on crude prices.

U.S. crude rose $1.01 to settle at $70.73 a barrel, breaking above the $70 mark for the first time since November 2014, while Brent gained $1.30 to settle at $76.17.

Nestle rose 1.6 percent after it gained the rights to market Starbucks products around the world outside of the U.S. company's coffee shops.

Nestle was the biggest contributor to the 0.59 percent advance in the pan-European FTSEurofirst 300 index of leading regional shares. Oil giants Royal Dutch Shell and Total were the fourth- and seventh-biggest contributors, respectively.

On Wall Street, the S&P energy index was the biggest gainer among the 11 major sectors during much of the session but faded by the close, ending up 0.18 percent.

Trump tweeted that on Tuesday he would announce his decision on whether to withdraw from the Iran nuclear deal.

"Oil has done well in anticipation of the announcement from Trump. People are braced for the worst," said Keith Lerner, chief market strategist at SunTrust Advisory Services in Atlanta.

The Dow Jones Industrial Average closed up 94.81 points, or 0.39 percent, at 24,357.32. The S&P 500 gained 9.21 points, or 0.35 percent, to 2,672.63 and the Nasdaq Composite added 55.60 points, or 0.77 percent, to 7,265.21.

Euro zone government bond yields slid as the unexpected fall in German industrial output was seen as encouraging the European Central Bank to prolong an unwinding of stimulus.

The yield on the benchmark 10-year German bund fell to 0.53 percent, while yields on U.S. benchmark 10-year Treasury notes rose slightly to 2.9516 percent. (Source Reuters – @her1en)

GLOBAL ECONOMIES

Australia – An index of Australian business conditions jumped to record-matching highs in April as firms reported broad-based strength in sales, profits and employment, suggesting the economy started the second quarter in healthy shape.

Monday's survey from National Australia Bank showed its index of business conditions rose 6 points to +21 in April, far above the long-run average of +5.5 and matching the highest reading since the survey began in 1997.

The survey's measure of profitability gained 6 points to +22 in April, while its sales index firmed 7 points to a very high +28. The employment index added 4 points to +13, while the often volatile measure of business confidence rebounded 2 points to +10.

Conditions increased in all industries except for manufacturing and retail and were strongest in mining, finance, business & property, construction and recreation & personal services.

"The strength in business conditions and leading indicators suggest economic growth will strengthen and that over-time we should see strong jobs growth and falls in the unemployment rate," said NAB group chief economist Alan Oster.

The Reserve Bank of Australia (RBA) highlighted the upbeat outlook of businesses last week when it forecast economic growth would top 3 percent this year and next.

Despite the robust readings on activity, the NAB survey found little evidence of faster inflation with retail prices subdued and labour costs around their average level over the last year.

New Zealand – The Reserve Bank of New Zealand (RBNZ) is widely expected to keep its cash rate at a record low 1.75 percent at its monetary policy meeting on Thursday, a Reuters poll of economists found.

All 16 economists forecast the RBNZ would hold rates on May 10. And all but one of the 15 economists who made projections beyond Thursday expect the bank to keep rates on hold until the end of 2018.

Eight of 14 economists thought the bank would hike rates by the end of the third quarter of 2019.

Economists were asked what the cash rate would be after the next Reserve Bank meeting on May 10 and where rates would be at the end of the following five quarters.

China – China's "huge" trade imbalance with the United States is a structural and long-term problem and should be viewed with rationality, the Chinese central bank governor was quoted as saying by financial magazine Caixin.

Yi Gang, appointed to head the People's Bank of China (PBOC) in March, also called for concerted efforts from the United States and China to resolve the trade dispute, Caixin said in a report published late on Friday.

The comments came after an inconclusive two-day meeting between Chinese and U.S. top level officials in Beijing amid escalating tit-for-tat tariff threats between the world's two biggest economies. Washington demanded that China reduce its trade surplus with the United States by at least $200 billion by the end of 2020, according to sources.

China had a record U.S. goods trade surplus of $375 billion in 2017.

China's opening up will not be affected by the current trade frictions with the United States, Yi said.

Yi only weighed in briefly on the U.S.-China trade issue in an extensive interview with Caixin in Washington in late April. The PBOC governor reiterated China's existing stance on a variety of matters including monetary policy, the opening up of its economy, the yuan and the country's deleveraging efforts.

He reiterated China's commitment to its prudent and neutral monetary policy and its focus on stabilising its macro leverage ratio and reducing financial risks. On the currency front, Yi said that the PBOC has not intervened in the foreign exchange market for almost a year now, and authorities are committed to market-based foreign exchange rate reform.

China will also push for the convertibility of the capital account to coincide with the opening up of the financial sector, Yi said. Beijing in recent weeks said it will resume two key outbound investment schemes, allowing domestic financial institutions to invest in overseas securities.

However, in the process of opening up, China will step up the oversight of cross-border capital flows, prevent the contagion of cross-border financial risks and fend off international arbitrage, Yi said.

In its deleveraging campaign, China will take aim at debt levels of local governments and state-owned firms, Yi added.

Japan – The Bank of Japan's decision to drop a timeframe for hitting its inflation target shows it is losing confidence in its price outlook and could mean it puts off exiting easy policy for years to come, a former central bank executive said.

The BOJ last month removed any reference to a timeframe for hitting its 2 percent inflation target, in a surprise move analysts said was aimed at keeping market expectations for more stimulus in check.

At the April 27 rate review, the BOJ also issued new forecasts projecting inflation will hit 1.8 percent in fiscal 2019 and 2020 - meaning inflation would fall short of the target for another three years. Eight of the nine board members said there were downside risks to the 2020 price forecast.

"The decision to drop the timeframe reflects a growing view within the BOJ that it's not easy to change public perceptions that inflation will stay very low, even with bold monetary easing," Kazuo Momma, who oversaw monetary policy and international affairs during his stint at the BOJ, told Reuters on Monday.

"The BOJ has made clear it no longer has any timeframe in mind in guiding policy. That means it could maintain current policy for years if the price target remains elusive," said Momma, who retains close contact with incumbent policymakers.

The central bank's projected timeframe has slipped several times since it was first introduced in 2013. In deploying a huge asset-buying programme back then, the BOJ pledged to hit the price goal in two years. Since then, weak inflation forced the bank to push back the timeframe six times.

While removing the timeframe may give the BOJ more flexibility in guiding policy, it may be hard for the bank to either expand or withdraw stimulus any time soon, he added.

"Consumer inflation is finally near 1 percent but the economy lacks momentum to push up prices further from here," said Momma, currently an economist at Mizuho Research Institute.

Having already deployed massive stimulus, the BOJ also has no effective tools left to ramp up stimulus, he said.

And yet, BOJ officials probably aren't convinced that the costs of maintaining a radical monetary experiment for years would be manageable, Momma said.

"They want as much free-hand on future policy as possible," he said, adding that removing the timeframe was the first step in that direction.

The challenge for BOJ Governor Haruhiko Kuroda's second term, which began in April, is to strike the right balance between the diminishing return and rising costs of his policy, he said.

"You can't predict risks. But what's clear is that the longer the BOJ continues its current policy, the bigger the risks become."

The BOJ has repeatedly said it is in no rush to follow in the footsteps of other central banks in dialing back stimulus. But some bank policymakers have openly complained of the rising costs such as the hit to bank profits from near-zero rates.

Euro Zone – Investor morale in the euro zone deteriorated for the fourth month in a row this month to its lowest level since February 2017, hit by concerns about the possible introduction of U.S. tariffs and a protectionist spiral, a survey showed on Monday.

Sentix's index for the euro zone fell to 19.2 from 19.6 in April. The Reuters consensus forecast was for a rise to 21.0. The fall was due to both lower economic expectations and investors' slightly weaker assessment of current conditions.

"Uncertainties about the introduction of punitive U.S. tariffs and the danger that this could lead to an expansion of protectionist measures are weighing on us," Manfred Huebner, managing director at Sentix, said in a note.

U.S. President Donald Trump has invoked a 1962 trade law to erect protections for U.S. steel and aluminium producers on national security grounds, amid a worldwide glut of both metals that is largely blamed on excess production in China.

A week ago, the White House announced that Trump had extended a temporary reprieve from the tariffs for the European Union, Canada and Mexico until June 1, just hours before they were due to come into force.

In the run-up to a June 1 deadline, Germany is urging its European partners to show some flexibility and pursue a broad trade deal that benefits both sides. But that puts Germany at odds with European peers such as France.

A Sentix survey for Germany also fell for the fourth month in a row, hitting its lowest since September 2016.

"The economy in Germany is booming and yet the zenith seems to have passed," Huebner said.

Sentix conducted the survey of 974 investors between May 3 to 5.

U.S. – Atlanta Federal Reserve bank president Raphael Bostic said on Monday he is comfortable with "some overshoot" of inflation and that the Fed will not draw a "big signal" on the likely path of prices if wages, as expected, begin to rise faster.

"We have seen some upward pressure (on inflation). We don't have the ability to stop trends on a dime. Some overshoot is fine," Bostic said at an Atlanta Fed conference here. His base case is for two additional rate increases this year, and a jump in wages won't necessarily change that.

If current trends continue, "we are going to see wages start to go up because we will truly have a scarcity of labor," Bostic said. "I am not sure there is a big signal" in that on inflation.

ASIAN STOCK INDEX

Japan's Nikkei share average ended flat in choppy trade on Monday as hopes that the central bank would buy exchange-traded funds offset weakness in financials which were hit by falling U.S. yields.

The Nikkei ended little changed at 22,467.16, after trading in negative territory in early deals.

The broader Topix added 0.1 percent to 1,773.18.

Traders speculated that the Bank of Japan would buy ETFs to support a weak morning session.

"On top of those hopes for the BOJ's ETF buying, retail investors chased small caps higher," said Chihiro Ohta, general manager of investment research at SMBC Nikko Securities.

The market was choppy in morning trade after opening a tad higher, as investors returning from Golden Week holidays found no surprise from the U.S. Federal Reserve policy meeting last Wednesday. Japanese markets were closed from Wednesday through Friday.

Liquid stocks such as Monex Group attracted buying by retail investors, surging 5.2 percent and was the most traded stock by turnover.

Defensive stocks which include utilities also gained, with Tokyo Electric Power Co up 4.6 percent and Chubu Electric Power 2.7 percent higher.

On the other hand, financial firms, which hunt for higher-yielding products such as foreign bonds, stumbled after U.S. Treasury yields dropped to multiweek lows on Friday, before ending flat.

The securities sector fell 1.3 percent and was the worst performer on the board, while insurers dropped 0.9 percent. Nomura Holdings slumped 2.2 percent and T&D Holdings declined 2.5 percent.

Mining shares outperformed, with Inpex rising 0.9 percent and Japan Petroleum Exploration gaining 1.2 percent after oil prices surged as a deepening economic crisis in Venezuela threatened the country's already tumbling oil supply.

The South Korean market is closed in observance of Children's Day.

Hong Kong stocks rose slightly on Monday, as fears of a full-blown Sino-U.S. trade war receded ahead of a flurry of Chinese economic data in the coming weeks.

The Hang Seng index rose 0.2 percent, to 29,994.26 points, while the China Enterprises Index gained 0.6 percent, to 11,966.41 points.

A flurry of Chinese data in the coming weeks is expected to show that the world's second-largest economy remained strong in April, underpinned by a pickup in industrial output and a rebound in exports despite rising trade tensions with the United States.

The sub-index of the Hang Seng tracking energy shares rose 2.1 percent, while the IT sector dipped 0.56 percent, the financial sector was 0.06 percent higher and the property sector dipped 0.26 percent. Lenovo Group Ltd which was down 2.96 percent.

China's main Shanghai Composite index closed up 1.48 percent at 3,091.0334 points, while its blue-chip CSI300 index ended up 1.58 percent.

Around the region, MSCI's Asia ex-Japan stock index was firmer by 0.16 percent, while Japan's Nikkei index closed down 0.03 percent.

China stocks rebounded sharply on Monday amid optimism about robust April economic data despite lingering Sino-U.S. trade tensions, as investors bid up tech shares after regulators detailed rules that pave the way for domestic flotation of overseas-listed technology giants.

The blue-chip CSI300 index rose 1.6 percent, to 3,834.19 points, while the Shanghai Composite Index gained 1.5 percent to 3,136.64 points.

Continued negotiations will likely result in a scale-back of the current proposal on tariffs as China quickens its implementation of some announced opening and reform measures in the next couple of months, UBS Securities wrote on Monday.

A flurry of Chinese data in the coming weeks is expected to show that the world's second-largest economy remained strong in April, underpinned by a pickup in industrial output and a rebound in exports despite rising trade tensions with the United States.

Tech shares in China rose sharply, after China's securities regulator on Friday published draft rules on the issuance of China Depositary Receipts, or CDRs, paving the way for domestic flotation of offshore-listed technology giants.

The blue-chip CSI300 index posted robust gains, with its financial sector sub-index higher by 1.02 percent, the consumer staples sector up 4.49 percent, the real estate index up 1.83 percent and healthcare sub-index up 2.54 percent.

The smaller Shenzhen index ended up 1.85 percent and the start-up board ChiNext Composite index was higher by 2.07 percent.

Around the region, MSCI's Asia ex-Japan stock index was firmer by 0.05 percent, while Japan's Nikkei index closed down 0.03 percent .

CURRENCIES – Daily Outlook

Dollar hits strongest level of 2018 as euro falls - Reuters News

The dollar hit a 2018 peak against a basket of currencies on Monday as investors increased bets that rising interest rates and inflation in the United States would boost the greenback, while traders unwound their bearish positions on the currency.

The index that tracks the dollar against a basket of currencies climbed to 92.974, its highest since December. It was last up 0.2 percent at 92.792.

Speculators trimmed their bets on a falling dollar to the lowest in seven weeks last week, based on Commodity Futures Trading Commission data released on Friday.

Some analysts cautioned the dollar's two-week long bounce in may be overdone.

"At this juncture, much of the market expectations for rising inflation and interest rates may already have been priced into the dollar, and upside momentum may have been overextended," said James Chen, head of research at Gain Capital in Bedminster, New Jersey.

Friday's somewhat disappointing U.S. payrolls report, which showed hiring and wage growth fell short of expectations, did not alter traders' outlook for further rate increases from the Federal Reserve.

"Nevertheless, the data was still expansionary, showing tepid but positive growth," Boris Schlossberg, managing director of FX strategy at BK Asset Management in New York, said of the April jobs data.

"In contrast, today news from the eurozone only added to the sense of dread in the region as consumer spending slowed materially," he added.

Traders have scaled back expectations on the timing of when the European Central Bank may raise interest rates following a spate of disappointing regional economic readings.

The euro broke below $1.19 for the first time this year in the aftermath of weaker-than-expected data on German industrial orders and euro zone investor sentiment.

The euro shed 0.3 percent at $1.1924 after touching $1.1896, the lowest in more than four months.

The British pound traded up 0.27 percent at $1.3562, bouncing off a four-month low of $1.3487 set last week. Sterling has slumped in the past fortnight as investors reversed expectations of a rate hike at the Bank of England's upcoming meeting on Thursday amid soft domestic data.

UK financial markets were closed for a bank holiday.

The Reserve Bank of New Zealand will also meet on Thursday and is expected to hold its key interest rate at a record low of 1.75 percent.

The Kiwi was down marginally at $0.7020, holding above its year-to-date low of $0.6985 set last week, Reuters data showed.

Precious Metal – Daily Outlook

Gold slips as dollar index climbs to 2018 peak - Reuters News

Gold slipped on Monday, snapping three days of gains as the U.S. dollar index strengthened after last week's soft U.S. jobs data did little to dampen optimism about the world's largest economy.

That left traders betting the U.S. Federal Reserve would proceed with lifting interest rates this year. Higher rates typically weigh on gold, as they increase the opportunity cost of holding non-yielding assets such as bullion.

"The dollar in the immediate term is overbought and gold is oversold today. (Gold) needs to recapture $1,322 to increase," said John Caruso, senior commodity strategist at RJO Futures.

Spot gold was down 0.04 percent at $1,314.08 an ounce by 1:36 p.m. EDT (1736 GMT), earlier hitting a one-week high at $1,318.85. U.S. gold futures for June delivery settled down $0.60, or 0.05 percent, at $1,314.10 per ounce.

The market was thinned by a national holiday in Britain, which closed trading desks in London.

"The dollar's strength, driven by a less hawkish European Central Bank and a disparity in bond yields (between the United States and Europe), has kept gold lower today," said TD Securities head of commodity strategy Bart Melek.

Investors were therefore tempering bets on higher gold prices, said Commerzbank analyst Carsten Fritsch, with speculators cutting their net long positions on Comex gold contracts to the lowest since July 2017 with a "massive reduction" in the last few trading weeks.

"Most speculative investors have thrown in the towel already," he said.

Government bond yields in the euro area rose in late Monday trading after the European Central Bank's chief economist, Peter Praet, said an earlier unexpected drop in euro zone core inflation may be a one-off.

Initially dropping, bond yields in the single currency bloc rose after his remarks.

The U.S. dollar index hit a 2018 peak against a commodity basket after U.S. jobs and wages data did little to alter perceptions of strength in the U.S. economy and consequently expectations for more Fed rate hikes.

Meanwhile, silver lost 0.1 percent to $16.47 an ounce. Palladium was up 0.1 percent at $967.97 an ounce, earlier hitting its highest level since April 27 at $980.

Platinum gained 0.7 percent to $911.90 an ounce, having earlier hit its highest price since April 25 at $918.70. Friday's positioning data from the CFTC suggests the metal may be due for a bounce, analysts said.

"With prices near the bottom of the recent one-year range, platinum is now in the oversold box," Societe Generale said in a note. \(Source Reuters, Research – @her1en\)

OIL – Daily Outlook

Oil surges on Venezuela-Conoco dispute, Iran sanction worries - Reuters News

Oil prices rose for the fourth straight day on Monday to hit levels not seen since late 2014, boosted by the latest trouble for Venezuelan oil company PDVSA and the possibility that the United States could re-impose sanctions on Iran.

U.S. West Texas Intermediate (WTI) crude futures rose $1.01, or 1.5 percent, to settle at $70.73 a barrel. This was the first time since November 2014 that WTI had climbed above $70. Brent crude futures jumped $1.30, or 1.7 percent, to settle at $76.17 a barrel.

U.S. oil major ConocoPhillips moved to take Caribbean assets of Venezuela's state-run PDVSA to enforce a $2 billion arbitration award.

"If ConocoPhillips is successful, then it will limit the revenues PDVSA will have and give them even more problems paying their bills and producing their oil," said Gene McGillian, manager of market research at Tradition in Stamford.

In total, the company's actions would affect about 400,000 barrels per day (bpd) typically shipped from the three locations, about a third of its exports. In the first quarter, PDVSA exported 1.19 million bpd of crude from its terminals in Venezuela and the Caribbean, a 29-percent decline versus the same period last year, according to Thomson Reuters data.

Venezuela's oil output has halved since the early 2000s.

U.S. President Donald Trump said a decision on whether to remain in the Iran nuclear deal or to impose sanctions would be announced at 2:00 p.m. EDT (1800 GMT) on Tuesday, four days earlier than expected.

"I think it's a sign that he's planning on reimposing sanctions, and the only question for oil markets is how soon," said Joe McMonigle, an energy analyst at Hedgeye Research. "I think they would as quickly as possible try to implement the sanctions."

The agreement has a dispute resolution clause that provides at least 35 days to consider a claim that any party has violated its terms. That can be extended if all parties agree.

If Trump restores core U.S. sanctions, under U.S. law he must wait at least 180 days before imposing their furthest-reaching measure: targeting banks of nations that fail to significantly cut their purchases of Iranian oil.

Analysts at RBC Capital Markets said Iran's exports could be cut by 200,000 to 300,000 bpd as a result. Iranian officials, however, said that the country's oil industry would continue to develop even if the United States pulls out of the accord.
